Arts-in-Corrections (AIC)

AIC is a program that allows offenders to express themselves and create self-awareness through the integration of a visual, literary, and performing arts curriculum. The program is led by professional artists and specialized organizations focusing on topics used for strengthening rehabilitation. The goal of the program is to expose offenders to courses where they can express themselves therapeutically through drawing, writing, dancing, poetry, acting, and other artistic methods.

Location(s): AIC is available at all CDCR institutions.

Length of Program: Program length varies by program, institution and contractor.

Enrollment: Programs are voluntary and enrollment varies by institution and workshop.

Eligibility Requirements: Program eligibility varies by institution and workshop.
